The Cotton Plant.

It is scarcely more easy to determine the cotton flourishes, than the qualities of the cotton produced in different countries. These qualities may be determined by the demand for them in the great cotton markets of the world; and as England and the United States are the two great markets, that which is most sought and used in these markets must possess the best qualities. Why does Mr. Greeley so strenuously contend for heavy protective duties? In part, because of his belief in the great skill of the British dealers and operatives in cotton. Long practice and thorough attention have perfected in them a knowledge of the qualities of different classes of cotton, as well as of the different modes of manufacture; therefore they are formidable competitors with our own dealers and artizans.

There are three countries from which con siderable amounts of cotton come to the British market, yet the United States supplies about two-thirds of all its demand. These countries are India, Egypt, and Brazil. India is an appendage of the British crown; and England has long studied how to render it subservient to her wealth, and has made the effort to produce cotton in it equal to that of the United States. The effort has been entirely unsuccessful. England would borrow and pay down, deeply as she is in debt, one hundred millions of pounds sterling to any man, or set of men, who would prove to her certainly, that, by a process not involving great expense in the production, India could be made to produce as good cotton as the United States. She would then lay a discriminating duty on American cotton, and give the market principally to her own. She feels her dependence on us for cotton a galling yoke. That dependence is the principal source of her late and interested civilities. She has come slowly and painfully to the conviction, that to strive to destroy the fiat of nature's God, who has created a soil and climate in America peculiarly suited to this plant, is a worse than useless effort. Egypt supplies her with considerable cotton, which is so mixed with the fine but multitudinous sand inseparable from its soil, as greatly to deteriorate its quality. The cotton of India has defects seemingly both of climate and soil. The inferiority of the Indian and Egyptian cotton is altogether irremediable. Brazilian, in process of time, by more skilful cultivation, might probably be brought some what to diminish her consumption of American but not to an important extent.

Thus, for at least a century-long enough if we act wisely and continue united, to accumulate unprecedented wealth-the United States are likely to continue the great cotton producers. Including that part of Texas fitted for the cotton culture, but a small part of which has yet been employed for that use, the South has a territorial capacity for producing cotton equal to five millions of bales per annum. If the world could be preserved in peace, thirty years would bring the United States up to that one hundred and fifty millions of dollars per him. annum. But inasmuch as there is too much reason to believe that but a few years will bring on a general war in Europe, the progress of the cotton culture must necessarily be affected by the vicissitudes of Empires and States. It is war the pursuits of industry can thrive as in the midst of profound general peace. Population is the great basis of wealth, ordinarily; even those nations, such as the Romans, who in the latter stages of their conquests, behaved with so much rapacity and injustice, nevertheless looked to the preservation of the population their own opulence; and often were the arts of lering proconsul exerted in vain to shield elf from punishment or contempt, because of the deep conviction of the Roman people that the prosperity of the subject provinces was intimately interwoven with their own. It was not until wealth overflowed, and corruption reached its height, that there men could protect themselves with the spoils they had wrenched from a groaning people; nor was their immunity even then universal. Verres sunk beneath the eloquence of Cicero; and Pompey and Marcellus were sustained by public opinion for their integrity and pecuniary incorruptibility, in an age the most corrupt that Rome ever ex-

Still, the culture of cotton will not be more affected or retarded by war than other branches of industry. All are in a greater or less degree seriously injured by it, unless under some pe culiar circumstances. The arts of peace are the true arts of industry-the elements in which they assume their greatest animation and promise their most extensive diffusion and improve-

If the qualities of our cotton are such as to cause for it such a pre-eminent demand, what are the circumstances that are calculated to diminish its consumption? Railroads are multiplying to an extent unprecedented in our own wealth also is augmenting rapidly. And there is nothing that cotton has to fear, if we can remove all causes of disturbance and discontent, north and south, by a cordial union on those compromises of the Constitution in which our fathers laid the foundation of our national greatness, and by a strict adherence to which we may effectually and gloriously secure it.

We have seen the want of sanity in the idea that flax can supersede cotton. The intellec tual complexion of some other agitators, north as well as south, seems to be of a similar cast to that of those who have started and pursued this idea so eagerly. Let us take for example the Rev. Theodore Parker, who is great at the Melodeon-great, as has been well said, among little men. It is only in such circumstances that he could be reckoned great; whether we look at his agitations against the compromise, or the tenor of his opinions on most important subjects before the question arose relative to this measure, we shall perceive the marks of an unsound judgment. About a year ago he his views relative to the origin of man. Four or five years since, a writer of considerable talent published a work called "Vestiges of Creation." The Rev. Theodore Parker found in this work something so singular, so calcula ted to excite a stare, so well adapted to have him pronounced by shallow minds a deep philosopher, would he but advocate these opinions, that the temptation to his vanity to adopt them was irresistible. The author of "The Vestiges" taught that animal existence (of such animals at least as live on land) began at the lowest scale, and gradually, by one change and trans formation after another, ascended to the highest; so that man was, actually, at last evolved from some monkey or ape of the highest classman being thus himself an improved ape, or perfected ourang-outang. Were there men of no sounder intellect than Mr. Theodore Parker. we think the evidence of his theory would be incomparably stronger than any derived from arguments which he has used. These opinions. so strongly expressive of an unsound mind, were proper sequels to some opinions which he gave to the world in a sermon many years ago, among which the following choice specimens may serve to illustrate and adorn him: That the New Testament was a heterogeneous compound of the oracles of God and the opinions and sayings of men-in which it was not near so easy to find out which came from God and which from man, as it was to ascertain that Mr. Theodore Parker was himself, though not inspired, equal to inspiration, and therefore there was no need of the latter, or at least no need of our being certified what its doctrines and revelations were. Another of his illuminations was, that there might be yet a Christ to come, superior to the Christ who had comeboth intellectually and morally; acknowledging at the same time that Christ who had come was great and good; but plainly implying that he was not as great and good as the Rev. Theodore Parker could easily conceive a human being might be.

We would not say, from one learn the charac ter of all; but there is much of a similar insanity, or folly, in these agitators generally, who are counselling us to act on that wisdom which is from beneath-" which is earthly, sensual, and devilish"-and not on that which is "from above; which is first pure, then peaceable gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and of good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy."

Mr. Kennedy in London.-We learn that J. C. G. Kennedy, esq., the Superintendent of the United States Census of 1850, read a paper before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, at its 21st meeting, at Ipswich, on the 13th of July. His subject was "The Influence of Discoveries in Science and works of Art, in developing the condition of a people, as indicated by the census of the United States.' The Athenaum, a periodical devoted to English and foreign literature, science, and the arts, of the date of July 19th, published an extended sketch of Mr. K.'s able paper.

It was a very candid, and perhaps the mos truthful American speech ever pronounced to English ears. He drew a faithful picture of the simple, yet grand and effective, working of our free institutions, and wonderfully excited actual production—a cotton crop equal to about the curiosity and admiration of all who heard

Knowing that he was in the presence of those who were prejudiced against his country on the subject of slavery, Mr. K. embraced the occasion to show the errors under which they labored, and that they were imbued with a spirit quite a mistake to believe, that in the midst of of false philanthropy. He exhibited the numbers of the different races, and reviewed the proportions of the sexes in each, and the relative increase, and contended from the facts developed that the colored population would rapidly become extinct if the immediate emancipaderstood, that slavery was a matter of Sint jurisdiction, over which the General Government had no control.

He dwelt on the subject of education also and stated the gratifying facts that there wer in our schools two and a half millions of pupils, and that there was a school fund of thirty millions of dollars!

TEMPERANCE EXCURSION.—The steamer Salem departed from this city yesterday morning, at half-past nine o'clock, with about two hundred passengers of both sexes and of all ages. She went down the river some 'twenty miles where, at about three o'clock, a squall sprung up and occasioned some danger and a good deal of fright. The awnings were torn to pieces and general consternation prevailed. Three young ladies helped the matter by fainting away, and we regret to state that one of them who had been in feeble health, did not rally throughout the evening, but continued to en dure recurring spasms. The Salem arrived here safely at half-past six o'clock, and but for the incidents we have related the excursion might be pronounced one of unalloyed pleasure.

DISTRESSING ACCIDENT .- Benjamin Franklin, aged fifteen years, the eldest son of Mr. J. Ashby, L street, Northern Liberties, met with a most painful injury on Wednesday. Whilst playing with several companions in the Northern country. England is growing in population, Liberties Market-house, he climbed above the with the exception of Ireland, which creates but meat-hooks, when he lost his hold, and, as he small consumption of cotton fabrics. Her fell, one of the hooks passed through his foot. In this condition he remained suspended until one of his playmates obtained the aid of a gentleman who happened to be near, and by whose aid he was taken down. Doctors McIntyre and Bogan came promptly to his relief, and rendered their kind offices to the sufferer. The latter gentleman has charge of the case, and the patient so far seems to be doing well.

FOURTH DISTRICT SCHOOLS.—The ceremony of the distribution of premiums to the successful aspirants of the Island schools took place yesterday afternoon in the spacious lecture-room of the Smithsonian Institution. The seats of the room were nearly filled with the children of the schools of both sexes, and a number of attentive and obviously gratified visiters.

Mr. Mayor Lenox opened the business by introducing to the assembly the Rev. Mr. Carothers, who thereupon delivered an address to the pupils, in which they were apprized of the expectations of their country from them in a sedulous cultivation of their intellectual and moral powers. He took a comprehensive sur-FOURTH DISTRICT SCHOOLS .- The ceres

Union, and denounced all who, in deed, word, or thought, contemplate its overthrow. He also dwelt on the exertions made by the people of Washington to come up to their duty in the great matter of extending universal education. Beverly Randolph, esq., of the Board of Trustees, then explained the principles which the Trustees had determined to act upon in the distribution of the honors and rewards they had met to confer. The first honor was for the distribution of the honors and rewards they had met to confer. The first honor was for the greatest proficiency in intellectual acquisition; the second, if indeed secondary, for moral su-periority; the third, for punctuality in attend-ance, a feature indispensable to scholastic suc-cess. Under the general head of intellectual proficiency, the premiums would be distributed in reference, first, to excellence in reading, then in the order of succession to orthography, pen-manship, arithmetic, grammar, history, and geography.

Mr. Lenox then distributed the silver medals.

as follows:

The medal for the male department of the Fourth District School, under charge of Mr. Thompson, was adjudged to Master Robert L.

The medal to the first pupil in the female department, under Mrs. Hinton, was adjudged to Miss Adelaide Harris.

Mrs. Hinton also awarded a silver medal to Miss Adeline Kinsey.

The medal to the first pupil in Male Primary, under Rev. William T. Eva, was adjudged to Robert Cross.

The medal to the first pupil in the Second Primary, under Miss Anderson, was adjudged to James West.

The medal to the first pupil in the Third Primary, under Miss Middleton, was adjudged to Emma Preuss.

ellished diploma. We observed present Messrs. Abbott, Haliday, Pearson, Adams, of the Board of Trustees, with the Secretary, the Rev. Charles A. Davis. Thomas Ritchie, esq., late editor of the Union, honored the company with his presence. During the proceedings the pupils of Mrs. Hinton's female department sung an appropriate vacation song in good style.

Succeeding the distribution of the premiums, interchanges of tokens of regard were made by teachers and friends of pupils to pupils, and by pupils to their teachers, all exhibiting commendable feeling and deep mutual interest.

The Mayor made some excellent remarks, in the course of which he stated that two friends of the schools had authorized him to say that next year they would give a silver cup to each of the four District Schools, to be the property of the pupil in each that shall by actual examimation and strict scrutiny, intellectually and morally, prove himself best entitled to it. The Mayor then called out Mr. Ritchie, who made

Mr. Rand-lph closed the whole by some enthusiastic remarks, urging the Island youth to such exertion as should prove them next year to be the "Banner Schools" of the city.—Intel.

In addition to the above interesting enumeration of the marks of honor distributed yesterday evening, we learn that two beautiful medals were presented by Mr. P. M. Pearson (a trustee of the Island schools) to Henry W. Yates, of the male department, and Miss Mary Ann Lee, of the female department. These medals were offered by Mr. P. at the beginning of the present year, to "the most meritorious pupil," including punctuality, deportment, &c. > THE CRIMINAL COURT has done nothing to lay. The jury in the Day case are yet in duress. The Intelligencer says that a material error ccurred in its report of Wednesday morning. The error consisted in stating that the court replied in the affirmative to a message from the jury asking whether they could change their ommendation to Executive elemency, instead of a commutation of punishment. The court declined any answer at all. The present term will probably conclude on Monday, when the jury will be discharged without agreeing on a verdict.

THE EXECUTION TO-DAY .- We quote the folowing singular and melancholy statement from the Baltimore American of this morning. We believe that justice will never be accomplished, nor the community rendered secure from outrage, until the present sanguinary laws are repealed, and greater certainty of punishment thus secured. The negro Amos Green.—This unfortunate man, who is to be hung to-day at Ellicott's Mills, for the commission of a rape upon the person of Mrs. Pepee, was removed last night from our jail, where he has been kept since his reprieve by the Governor, to the Mills. Green has lately reiterated to the Rev. Mr. Carter, of Howard District, the Rev. Mr. Slicer, of this city, and to a number of other persons, his statement in regard to his connexion with Mrs. Pepee. His statement in no degree differs from that he has all along asserted, except in its being made under circumstances of more so-lemnity, and in view of the inevitable fate which awaits him.

Green most solemnly denies the commission Green most solemnly denies the commission of anything like the crime of rape, whilst admitting his intimacy and connexion with Mrs. Pepee. His revelations in regard to this woman, if they could be supported by any proof, would show her to be a most abandoned and infamous character. During his imprisonment here he has received the pious attentions of both the reverend gentlemen named above, and it is believed end gentlemen named above, and it is believed is prepared to meet his fate in a proper frame of mind.
